- [ ] 1. Get medical care within 14 days of the crash. Initial treatment must come from a qualifying provider (for example, a medical doctor, osteopathic physician, chiropractor, dentist, hospital/ER, or emergency medical services) to be eligible for PIP benefits.
- [ ] 2. Tell your own auto insurer about the crash as soon as possible. In Florida, your own PIP coverage is usually the first source of medical and lost-wage benefits, even if you weren't at fault.
- [ ] 3. Write down your claim number, adjuster's name, and contact info.
- [ ] 4. Get your crash report number from the responding law enforcement agency.
- [ ] 5. Keep every document: medical bills, receipts, letters, emails, and texts from your insurer. Photos of the vehicles and scene help too.
- [ ] 6. Watch for EUO and IME requests. Your insurer may ask you to give an Examination Under Oath or attend an Independent Medical Exam. Put the dates on your calendar. Missing them without a good reason can put your benefits at risk.
- [ ] 7. If you missed work, collect proof of lost income (pay stubs, an employer letter, or tax records). PIP generally covers 60% of lost income, up to your policy limits.
- [ ] 8. Know what PIP generally pays: 80% of reasonable medical expenses, up to $10,000 in total benefits. Coverage may be limited to $2,500 unless a qualifying provider determines you had an emergency medical condition. You may owe the remaining 20%.
- [ ] 9. If a bill or claim is denied, ask for the reason in writing and keep a copy. You may want to speak with a Florida attorney about your options.
